Presenting the
THIRD ARMORED DIVISION

SPEARHEAD IN PEACE A

S IN WAR

HEADQUARTERS THE ARMORED CENTER

Office of the Commanding General

Fort Knox, Kentucky

31 May 1949

To the Members of the Third Armored Division:

The Third Armored Division is an integral part of the Armored Center, which I am privileged to command. Together we forge the thunderbolt of armored protection for the future security of the United States and the world.

Your Division was a spearheading element in the fighting force which protected our country during the past war and ultimately brought about the downfall of our enemies. Now in peace you are again leading the way toward security by means of the new training methods and better individual relationships in training which you have pioneered.

By continued cooperation we can both materially assist in the maintenance of the peace and security of the world.

WILLIAM G. LIVESAY
Major General, U. S. Army
Commanding

WILLIAM G. LIVESAY
Major General
Commanding Fort Knox

Greetings—

Your history, as a unit, dates from 1941. It began when this Division was activated and trained to be a fighting machine. The success of this training is proven by the glorious combat record, equalled by few other units. The long line of "firsts" of this Division in combat is a challenge that we must accept.

The Division was inactivated 10 November 1945 in Europe. On 15 July 1947 the 3d Armored Division was reactivated as a training Division. The Standards that were carried by this great fighting unit with such gallantry and pride were placed in our hands.

Our job is to give basic individual training to soldiers who, upon completion of this training, can take their place in any fighting team.

Since activation this Division has taken up this challenge. It now ranks high among our training divisions. This is due to the all-around cooperation within all echelons of this command. During a recent inspection by Army Field Forces the Chief inspector stated, "I have never seen such unswerving loyalty toward one common goal." To accomplish our mission we must keep this loyalty.

We must not lose sight of our objective, and it must govern our actions. We must strive constantly to improve the quality of our training, keeping in mind the fact that every soldier should be trained to be a fighting soldier.

I am proud to be your Commanding General and am confident that we will carry on the best traditions and high standards of the 3d Armored Division.

TO THE OFFICERS AND THE MEN

RODERICK R. ALLEN
Major General
Commanding
Third Armored Division

Major General Roderick R. Allen is a native son of Texas and an honor graduate of Texas A. & M. He has served for 32 years as an officer in the United States Army.

General Allen was commissioned as a second lieutenant, Cavalry, Regular Army, November 23, 1916 and later promoted to first lieutenant. In 1920 he was promoted to Captain while serving in France with the 3d Cavalry. He has served in many command and staff positions and has been an instructor in the Command and Staff School at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas. He has been Chief of the Personnel Section, Office Chief of Cavalry and a member of the G-3 section, War Department General Staff.

General Allen first served at Fort Knox in 1940 as Operations Officer of the 1st Armored Regiment and later became Executive Officer of the 1st Armored Brigade. Tours of service followed as a regimental commander, 3d Armored Division; Chief of Staff 6th Armored Division; Combat Commander, 4th Armored Division; and Division Commander of the 20th Armored Division in the Zone of the Interior.

He was promoted to Major General (Temporary) 23 February 1944 and in September he flew overseas to take command of the 12th Armored Division. He led the Division through the Rhineland Campaign and into the Colmar Pocket with the US Seventh Army and then was loaned to the Third Army where his Division spearheaded the drive to the Rhine River. After crossing the Rhine the Division reverted back to the Seventh Army and led the Drive through Germany to Austria.

Upon the inactivation of the 12th Armored Division he became Commanding General of the 1st Armored Division on occupation duty in Germany. In February 1946 he became Director of Plans and Training in the European theater and returned to the Zone of the Interior in October 1947 as the Director of Intelligence, Army Field Forces. General Allen assumed command of the Third Armored Division on 15 April 1948. He was promoted to the permanent grade of Major General in May of 1949.

For distinguished leadership and gallantry in action, General Allen was awarded the Distinguished Service Medal, Silver Star, Legion of Merit, Bronze Star, Commendation Ribbon, French Legion of Honor, French Croix de Guerre with Palm, the Czechoslovakian Order of the White Lion and the Czechoslovakian Victory Cross.

The Division Patch

The basic pattern is that of three interlaced torques, no one of which would be sufficient without the other two. Combined to form a single triangle, the device indicated integrity and esprit de corps. The predominating colors of the armored force patch, yellow, red and blue are those of the basic arms: Cavalry, Field Artillery and Infantry, all of which are components of the present integrated armored command and progenitors of the present armored force.

The superimposed black symbols have a more modern meaning...the tank track for mobility and armor protection, the cannon for firepower, and the belt of lightning to designate shock action. The Arabic numeral is the Division designation.

The basic design and combination of colors are taken from the official insignia of World War I Tank Corps, plus that of various Infantry tank organizations, and the superimposed symbols from that of the old 7th Cavalry Brigade (mechanized). Most modern component of the 3rd Armored Division patch is the Spearhead which was authorized by Maj. Gen. Maurice Rose after the Division had led many of the First Army's drives in France and Belgium and Germany.

"SPEARHEAD IN THE WEST"

The Third Armored Division in World War Two

The Third Armored Division "Spearhead" was forged in Louisiana and tempered in the hedgerows of Normandy.

Birth began at Camp Beauregard, Louisiana in 1941. It was then commanded by General Alvin Gillem. The Armored Force, which went charging through France and Germany, was an infant then.

The United States was still at peace although Europe was blazing with the Nazi application of blitz warfare.

The men of the Third Armored Division justified the General's faith in them, "my always dependable" as they led the American First Army through France, graduating from the novice to the heavyweight class.

The name "SPEARHEAD" was given for the many firsts compiled by the Division... first to enter Belgium, first to break through the Siegfried Line, first to fire artillery shells on German soil, first to capture a German City.

From Camp Beauregard, the Third Armored moved to Camp Polk, Louisiana, and the basic training nucleus was formed.

The Mojave Desert Training center, California, then under the Command of General George S. Patton, was the Third's next move.

Stumsdorf, Germany, in flames after attack by Third Armored Division tanks.

This training toughened the men and prepared them for ultimate combat.

Camp Pickett, Virginia, was next and then Indiantown Gap, Pa., where more intensive combat training was undergone.

The Division was alerted for overseas movement August 10, 1943 and departed from Camp Kilmer, N. J., September 4. Four days later they received word, while on the high seas, of Italy's surrender, which was the first stepping stone in the path to victory in Europe.

September 15 the Third docked at Liverpool and was billeted in Wiltshire, England where final phases of combat operations were practiced.

June 28, 1944, the Third Armored Division hit Omaha Beach in Normandy. Hedgerow fighting was slow but the Division's Armored might exploded at Marigny and swung south to Mayenne, leading the First Army's units through the St. Lo breakthrough.

Green troops were now seasoned veterans, knowing that an 88 has no eyes and little respect for rank.

August 7, General Rose assumed command of the Division, relieving General LeRoy H. Watson. Rose, a former combat command leader in the Second Armored Division, was an accomplished tanker and strategist.

Then, the Division closed the Falaise-Argentan pocket, containing the German Seventh Army near Putanges, 18 August. Six days later the SPEARHEAD elements were on the banks of the Seine River after speeding through Courville and Chartres.

When the muddy terrain became impassable and stopped the tanks, they took over as artillery pieces.

Once over the stubborn Seine, August 25, the drive for the Siegfried Line began. The streak across France and Belgium saw Meaux, Soissons, Laon, Marle, Mons, Charlerol, Namur and Liege fall to the slugging Armor and Infantry team.

This 18 day move was one of the most amazing and rapid Armor moves in history. At Mons, the Division captured 8,000 prisoners and cut off more than 40,000.

Nazi might was crumbling before the rapier-like edge of the SPEARHEAD. Germany had been safe from foreign invaders since the days of Napoleon, but now the Third Armored Division sent the first American artillery shell into German soil on September 10.

Two days later the border was crossed and the breach of the Siegfried Line was started.

The move was temporarily halted December 16, when Von Rundstedt began the counter offensive in the Ardennes.

During the Battle of the Bulge the 3rd jumped into action at Houffalize, Belgium, and severed an important highway leading to St. Vith.

January, 1945, saw the Division advancing at the tortuous rate of a half mile a day against bitter and violent opposition into Germany. The Roer River defense line was stormed and the SPEARHEAD swept into the key industrial city of Cologne in February, 1945. Paderborn, the "Fort Knox Armored Center" of Germany, was swept up and the back door to the Ruhr Pocket was closed in the advance.

The joy of storming Paderborn was cloaked in sadness by the death of the Third's commanding General, Major General Maurice Rose. The General was leading a drive to take a road junction near Paderborn when he ran into German tanks.

Flak-wagon of an anti-aircraft battalion attached to the Third Armored Division stands alert for enemy fighters near Bastogne.

The General apparently thought the tank commander was asking for his pistol. He reached for it, but was killed.

Brig. Gen. Doyle Hickey assumed command of the Division.

After mopping up the Lippstadt-Paderborn area, the Division jumped off on April 5, and reaching the new objective found every bridge blown by the Nazis in their hasty flight.

In spite of this resistance, the Weser River was crossed and 22 towns were taken before sunset, April 9.

On April 11, the German city of Nordhausen was taken and scenes of horror in the German Prison camps will live forever in the minds of men of the Third Armored Division.

An all out drive was started for the Elbe River. Dessau provided a brief flurry of resistance. It was taken April 23, and the Division crossed the Salle River north of Halle.

Thirteen days later, VE Day was officially proclaimed.

At war's end the SPEARHEAD pulled up at Dessau and followed occupational duty near Langen. This role was filled until inactivation day, Friday, November 9 at Aalen, Germany.

During combat, the Third Armored Division lost 2214 men killed in action, 7451 wounded, 706 missing in action. Third Armored captives totaled 76,000.

The SPEARHEAD had led General Collins First Army across a flaming Europe... Normandy — St. Lo — Falaise — Mons — Namur — Liege — the Siegfried Line — the Ardennes Cologne — Paderborn — Nordhausen — Dessau! Flaming symbols of total war.

July 15, 1947, the Third Armored Division was reactivated at Fort Knox, Kentucky, as a basic training center. The training program in use in the SPEARHEAD Division is being studied and observed by leaders of other training units throughout the United States.

Major General Maurice Rose commanded the Division during combat until his death.

Brigadier General Doyle O. Hickey, commanded Combat Command A.

Fort Knox, Kentucky — Home of the Third Armored Division

Fort Knox, Kentucky, often referred to during World War II as the "third largest city in Kentucky," is universally known as the "Home of American Armor," for it was here that the idea was developed to mechanize elements of the United States Army.

The history of Fort Knox dates back to 1903, at which time maps of this section were drawn up and presented to the War Department together with plans and sketches. The War Department leased 10,000 acres of the land and later that year, 30,000 troops moved into the area to participate in the Army's first large-scale maneuvers.

However, plans to erect a camp lay idle until 1918 when the War Department decided to appropriate funds to purchase 40,000 acres of land to establish a training center for Field Artillery during World War I. The site was named Camp Knox in honor of General Henry Knox, Commander of Artillery during the Revolutionary War and later the first Secretary of War. Construction was begun but was only partially completed when the Armistice was signed.

In 1919, however, an additional appropriation was made to purchase more land. From 1919 to 1931, Camp Knox was only used for summer training of National Guard, ROTC, CMTC, and ORC elements of the Fifth Corps area.

In 1931, Camp Knox was visited by General (then Colonel) Daniel Van Voorhis, original commander of the mechanized cavalry. He was accompanied by other members of a War Department Delegation and they selected the post as the most suitable location for the organization and training of a mechanized cavalry brigade.

In 1932, the War Department designated the post as a permanent military establishment and changed the name to Fort Knox. From that time, Fort Knox grew steadily. Many permanent buildings were constructed, including brick barracks, family quarters for officers and non-commissioned officers, post headquarters, hospitals, sewage disposal plant and many others. More land was purchased and made a part of the reservation until today the entire post covers an area of approximately 107,000 acres, and is the largest post in the Zone of Interior.

In 1935, the United States Treasury Department established the Gold Depository here—a beautifully modern, well-guarded building that holds the major portion of the world's gold; and, at one time during World War II, safeguarded the Constitution, the Declaration of Independence, the British Magna Charta, the Gutenberg Bible, and the original of Lincoln's Gettysburg Address with his marginal notes.

The development of the mechanized cavalry unit got well under way in January 1933, when General Van Voorhis assumed command of the First Cavalry at Marfa, Texas, and returned to Fort Knox with it. This unit later became the nucleus for the new mechanized cavalry command.

Throughout the 1930's (the lean years) when there was opposition both in and out of the Army against a mechanized force, pioneering expounders of mobilized theories clung to their firm convictions that the Army needed machines as well as men. Others with General Van Voorhis who propounded these theories were men such as Colonel Bruce Palmer who assisted immeasurably in developing the cavalry tactics and techniques later employed by the armored force; Colonel (later General) Charles L. Scott, long an advocate of mechanization and one of the key figures in both the organization and development of the armored force; Lieutenant Colonel (later General) Adam R. Chaffee, who conducted a one man campaign for mechanization while on duty with the Budget and Legislative Planning Branch of the War Department; Lieutenant Colonel Allen F. Kingmen and Lieutenant Colonel Sereno E. Brett, both of whom later became Brigadier Generals, were spreading the new gospel on the use of armor. Their opinions and ideas, while instructors at the Command and General Staff School, had a great deal to do with laying the foundation for later conceptions of the armored division and subsequent development of Fort Knox.

The Armored Force was born on 10 July 1940. On that day, the War Department issued a directive stating: "For the purposes of service tests, an armored force is created."

Fort Knox became the headquarters of the new arm of service and to General Chaffee fell the staggering task of building a new military unit when America was at peace. As Fort Knox became the birthplace of all the armored divisions, its proximity to such industrial centers as Detroit, Michigan, and significant contributions of the American Automotive and Locomotive industries added greatly to the new units' rapid program of expansion.

When it was launched the Armored Force had as its backbone the 7th Cavalry Brigade (Mechanized) and approximately six battalions of Infantry tank units which composed the provisional tank brigade. Of these units, the basic components of the Armored Force were organized and developed into the modern hard-hitting armored units that spearheaded our drive across Africa and Europe during World War II.

Fort Knox, though a mere youngster compared to other permanent military establishments, kept pace with the newly developed branch of service—the Armored Force—and is today one of the foremost training centers in military science, tactics and techniques. At present the major units on the post include The Armored School, The Third Armored Division, the Universal Military Training Experimental Unit, the 2128th Area Service Unit, the Food Service School, the Medical Department Field Research Laboratory, Army Field Forces Board No. 2, Godman Field and the 315th Army Air Force Base Unit, all under the command of The Armored Center.

Today, The Armored Center has embarked upon a new revitalized training program. Emphasis is being placed upon developing technicians capable of keeping American armor abreast of the latest developments in military science.

As the reader peruses articles in the Armored Cavalry Journal, he will become fully aware and convinced of the tremendous achievements and farsightedness of the original founders of the armored forces and of the aggressiveness and capabilities of the present leaders at Fort Knox in keeping it the "Home of American Armor."
